

Investor Meeting Prep

6 steps • 11 min read • Available from the Operator plan

Before you share a deck, a data room, or a cap table with anyone outside the founding team, a small amount of legal preparation protects both your confidential information and your credibility as a well-run company.

WHY IT MATTERS

- Investors form an early impression of your operational maturity from how organised your legal basics are, not just from your pitch.
- An NDA signed before sensitive disclosure is standard practice, but should not be so heavy it puts off a serious investor.
- A current, signed Founder Agreement resolves the questions every investor asks early: who owns what, and what happens if a founder leaves.

Step-by-step

1

Decide what actually needs an NDA

Not every first meeting requires one. Reserve NDAs for conversations involving financial detail, proprietary technology, or customer data beyond what is on your public deck.

2

Run the Non-Disclosure Agreement wizard

Generate a mutual NDA scoped to the categories of information you will actually share, with a reasonable (not indefinite) confidentiality term.

3

Route the NDA via a scoped, expiring link

Send counterparties a link to review and sign without requiring them to create an account — investors move faster when friction is low.

4

Confirm your Founder Agreement is current

Check equity splits, vesting schedules, IP assignment, and good-leaver/bad-leaver terms match the current reality of the founding team.

5

Prepare your evidence pack for the data room

Assemble signed contracts, cap table, IP assignments, and company records into a consistent, hash-verified set investors can trust without re-checking manually.

Log the meeting and any follow-up commitments

Note what was disclosed, under which NDA, and any follow-up actions in your Company Snapshot so your fundraising trail stays organised across multiple investor conversations.

Quick checklist

- Scope of disclosure decided before the meeting
- NDA generated and reviewed
- NDA routed for e-signature via a scoped link
- Founder Agreement confirmed current
- Evidence pack assembled for the data room
- Meeting and disclosures logged in the Company Snapshot
